Choice Poetry.

WOMAN'S LOVE.

Like the desert-dwelling rose,
Like the peacock's tail that shows
In some far off, foreign land,
Through the waste of burning sand,
And under the fiercest heat,
Held to give life and cheer,
Like the lady's red and white,
Whose sweet notes of joy are heard;
Like all these things, woman's love
Is a source of pleasure pure,
And under the fiercest heat,
Peace and gladness both impart.

In some far off, foreign land,
Through the waste of burning sand,
And under the fiercest heat,
Held to give life and cheer,

Inhalation in Consumption

essentially treated by the Inhalation of Medicaments, Vapors and Powders, by absorption and constant and treatment as practiced in the Stuyvesant Medical Institute, New York City. Diseases of the Heart and Liver, Female Complaints, Dyspepsia, Venereal Affections, and Chronic Discharges generally, will receive the attention of the Physicians to whom such cases may have been especially entrusted.

The unprecedented success, which has attended this method of treating diseases of the Lungs and Throat, has induced us to depart from our usual course, and avail ourselves of the columns of the Press, in order to bring it to the knowledge of such as may be laboring under, or predisposed to such affections.

The dawn of a brighter day has at length arrived for the Consumptive; the doctrine of the incurability of Consumption having at length passed away. We have prohibitory words, in our possession, THAT CONSUMPTION IN ALL ITS STAGES, CAN BE CURED!—in the first, by tubercular absorption; in the second, by the trans-formation of tubercule into liquid and calcareous concretions; in the third, by cicatrization, or scars. Those wedded to the opinion that tubercles may arrest, that even now, Consumption is curable; such are behind the age. To all this, goodly as must be apparent, viz: that the medicine inhaled in the form of Vapor or Powder, directly into the lungs, must be much more effective than that taken into the Stomach, where the disease does not exist. The advantage of Inhalation in Consumption and Throat Disease, is that the medicine in the form of vapor, is applied directly to the lungs, where the disease exists; the stomach is not reached, and the patient is suffering by administering to it food, and giving food. There is no case so hopeless that inhalation will not reach. The means, too, are brought within the reach of all, the

The Inhaling method is soothing, safe, and agreeable, and consists of the administration of medicines in such a manner that they are conveyed into the lungs in the form of vapor, and produce their action at the seat of the disease. As success is destined to revolutionize the opinions of the world, and establish the entire curability of Consumption, I earnestly appeal to the common sense of all afflicted with lung diseases; to embrace at once the advantages of Inhalation; and no longer apply medicines to the unoffending stomach. I claim for inhalation a place among the priceless gifts that nature and art have given us, that "our days may be long in the land," and as the only ARK OF REFUGE FOR THE CONSUMPTIVE; a method not only rational, but simple, safe, and efficacious. Such of the profession that have adopted inhalation have found it efficacious in the highest degree, arresting the progress of the disease, and working wonders in many desperate cases. In verity, a signal triumph of our art over this fell destroyer of our species.

to reject, did not affirmatively cut up the overtures of the United States. While the question was in this position, the representatives of Russia, France, Great Britain, Austria, Prussia, Sardinia, and Turkey, assembled at London in 1863 for consideration of the maritime rights and duties of the United States. The declaration containing the two principles of this government had submitted, nearly twenty years before, to the consideration of maritime powers, and adding thereto the following positions: "Privateering is and remains abolished," and "blockades, in order to be living, must be effective—that is to say, sustained by force sufficient really to prevent the coast of the enemy;" and the declaration of the United States, in support of which had already been proposed by the United States, this government has been intended to accede by all the powers, represented by the present Great Britain and Turkey, the last of the two additional propositions, and in relation to blockades, there can be no objection. It is merely the intention of what shall constitute the effectual blockade, which this government places a definition upon, which this government always considered, claiming to comply for the most part with the rule thus defined, and not injurious to our commerce. As to the remaining article of the declaration in the name of Paris—"that privateering is and remains abolished"—I certainly cannot assent to the powers represented in the conference of Paris any but liberal and philanthropic in their views, and to change the unquestionable rule of maritime law, in regard to privateering. Their proposal was intended to imply approval of the principle that private property upon the ocean, although it might belong to the citizens of a belligerent State, should be exempted from capture; and had that proposition been adopted, it would have received my ready assent on the ground of its being in accordance with the principle of the law of nations. The measure proposed is inadequate to that purpose. It is not that, if adopted, private property upon the ocean would be withdrawn from one class of plunder, but left exposed, meanwhile, to another mode, which could be used with increased effectiveness. The aggressive capacity of great naval powers would be thereby augmented, while the defensive ability of others would be reduced. Though the surrender of the means of prosecuting hostilities by enabling privateers, as proposed by the conference of Paris, is mutual in terms, yet, in practice, it would be the relinquishment of a part of little value to one class of States, of essential importance to another and a dangerous class. It ought not to have been proposed that a measure so inadequate to the accomplishment of the proposed object, so unequal in its operation, would receive my assent. The maritime powers. Private property would be still left to the depredations of public armed cruisers.

I have expressed a readiness on the part of this government to accede to all the principles contained in the declaration of the conference of Paris, provided that the one relating to the abandonment of privateering can be amended so as to effect the object for which, in my opinion, it was intended—the immunity of private property upon the ocean from hostilities by capture. If effect this amendment, it is to add to the declaration that "privateering is and remains abolished;" the following amendment: "And that the private property of subjects and citizens of a belligerent State, on high seas shall be exempt from seizure by public armed vessels of the other belligerent, except it be contraband." This amendment presented not only to the powers which have been assent to the declaration to abolish privateering, but to the maritime States. Thus far it has not been rejected by any, and is favorably entertained by all which have made any communication in reply.

In view of the governments, regarding with the proposition of the United States, I believe definite action upon it only for the purpose of referring with others, parties to the conference of the United States, is satisfactory. It is, however, that the Emperor of Russia has entirely and implicitly approved that modification, and will cooperate in favoring to obtain the assent of other powers, and that assurances of a similar purport have been received in relation to the disposition of the Emperor of the French.

In another aspect of this important subject, I desire to cherish the hope that a principle of humane and exacting justice and equity in its operation, so essential to the prosperity of commercial nations, and so congenial to the sentiments of this enlightened people of all maritime powers, and thus be incorporated into the code of international law. The views on the subject are more fully set forth in the reply of the Secretary of State, a copy of which has been transmitted, in the communications on the subject made to this government, especially to the communication of the Secretary of the United States has at no time regarded with friendly interest the States of America, formerly, like this country, European colonies, and now independent members of the great family of nations, in the unsettled condition of some of the distracted and turbulent States, and in the inability of regular and official administration to extend an adequate protection to our public intercourse, by reason of the wrongs which our citizens suffer at their hands, and which they are slow to redress. It is fortunately it is against the republic of Cuba, with which it is our special desire to maintain a good understanding, that such wrongs are most numerous; and although justly urged, and requiring attention, they have not yet received the consideration which this government had a right to expect. A reparation for past injuries has been withheld others have been added. The political condition of that country, however, has been such as to demand forbearance on the part of the United States. I shall continue to endeavor to procure for the wrongs of our citizens redress which is indispensable to a continued friendly association of the two countries.

The peculiar condition of affairs in Nicaragua is the early part of the present year resulted in it important that this government should have diplomatic relations with that State, through its territory had been opened one of the principal thoroughfares across the isthmus connecting North and South America, on which a vast amount of property was transported, and which had been involved in such unnumbered times in passing between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of the United States, the destruction of both required that the existence of that State should be recognized as a reasonable government; and its minister was accordingly received.
